In her deeply personal and thought-provoking book, Broken We Kneel, author M. Colleen Cruz delves into the intricate tapestry of faith, citizenship, and social justice. Through the lens of her own experiences as a Filipina-American woman, Cruz explores the complexities of navigating multiple identities and the challenges of reconciling our spiritual beliefs with the realities of the world we live in.

Broken We Kneel: Alt Attribute

The title of the book, Broken We Kneel, is both a metaphor and a call to action. It speaks to the brokenness that we all experience in our lives, both as individuals and as a collective society. It also suggests that it is in this brokenness that we find the strength to kneel, to humble ourselves, and to connect with something greater than ourselves.

Cruz's writing is raw and honest, as she shares her own struggles with faith, doubt, and the search for meaning in the midst of personal and national trauma.

She writes about the pain of losing her father, the trauma of sexual assault, and the heartbreak of witnessing the suffering of others. Yet, through it all, she never loses sight of her faith. Instead, she finds ways to deepen her connection to God and to use her voice to speak out for justice.

Interwoven Threads: Faith, Citizenship, and Social Justice

One of the most powerful aspects of Broken We Kneel is the way that Cruz weaves together the threads of faith, citizenship, and social justice. She shows us that these three elements are inextricably linked, and that we cannot fully live out our faith without also being engaged in the work of building a more just and equitable world.

Cruz challenges us to think critically about the ways in which our faith can be used to justify oppression and injustice. She also calls on us to use our faith as a source of strength and inspiration to work for change.

Broken We Kneel is a timely and important book that will resonate with anyone who has ever struggled with their faith, their citizenship, or their place in the world. Cruz's writing is a gift to us, offering us hope, inspiration, and a renewed sense of purpose.
